Photo sliders Photo sliders are like changeable slideshows of images that are arranged in a sequence. They are often used to present images on the Internet as a type of slideshow, but you can use them for other types of slideshows, too. Clicking on the slider will step through the images. I also like to use them for photo presentation slideshows. To create photo sliders in Photoshop, follow these simple steps: 1. Open a New Document and make sure there is enough white space around the image to take up as much of the image as possible. 2. Click on the image that you want to use in the slideshow. Drag the image to a new location. 3. Click on the Slider icon in the Image Window (shown in the margin). A thumbnail of the first photo in the slideshow will appear at the bottom of the Image Window. 4. Click on the Slider icon (shown in the margin), click on the image in the thumbnail, and then click on the word "Stop." 5. Click on the image thumbnail again to return the image to the thumbnail position, and then click on the word "Play" to play the slideshow. To create a bullet point list in a slideshow, use the Layer Styles tool. Click on the slide until the choice of bullet points is grayed out (shown in the margin). Click on the palette to open the Menu bar. Click on the word "Bullet Point Style," then click on the left-pointing arrow to select the type of bullet point you want to use. For example, you can use a curved bullet point to create a podium-like reading area. Doodle and drawing Doodle and drawing tools are perfect for adding a bit of creativity to your work. Before you begin, I recommend that you create a background color that will help you better see your work when you're finished. I usually create a white

Photoshop Elements 10 is the latest version, and is capable of the same features found in the professional edition. Why use Photoshop Elements instead of Photoshop? The reasons behind choosing Photoshop Elements are quite varied, some people use Photoshop Elements because they have never learned Photoshop, others use it because they want to produce high-quality photographs, and others because they just prefer a more simple version with fewer features.
